Humanities restructured

by Beth Peter

During the past summer, the Humanities program was restructured to better accommodate the students' needs. This year was a natural break to rethink and resort the course with the retirement of Sister Adele Zahn, former literature lecturer for Humanities. Doctor Ray Craig, current literature lecturer, commented that Sr. Adele did an excellent job while she was with the program.

The course still maintains the traditional balance of literature, art, and music. The art and music sections have remained unchanged since a recent survey showed that alumni enjoyed these two most.

The literature section has been revised substantially. There is now a single textbook entitled Culture and Values which is self-contained. Much of the summer was spent searching for a solid text. Paperback books are no longer required, which

Weekend flood hits campus

by Tina Kunkler

Three halls on campus were flooded this past weekend because of excessive rains, according to Ron Schmoll, superintendent of buildings and grounds.

With three to four inches of rain having fallen in a relatively short period of time, drains became overloaded and backed up and water leaked into window casings in the three halls. The city drainage that serves the area of Marian College is not adequate to channel the water, according to Schmoll.

Areas that were flooded were the bookstore, the Psychology department, the room where the telephone system is located, the Nursing department in the basement of St. Francis Hall, and the basement of Clare Hall.

Schmoll commented, "I've been here 17 years and this was the worst I've seen." He and Paul Schmoll were on campus from 5 p.m. Saturday to 2 a.m. Sunday cleaning up the water and blocking the drains.

Approximately $200 in merchandise was damaged in the bookstore, the worst hit location, according to Sister Shirley Massey, manager. Some papers were ruined in the Nursing department, as well, but other areas sustained little damage.

Schmoll appreciated the help he got from Sr. RoseMary Lee and Sr. Janice Scheidler in cleaning up the bookstore, "They always come over to help out when we have these problems."

New faculty join the Marian team

by Dallice Hesselgrave

This year, many new full-time educators are on the Marian Campus. Two new full-time educators are working in the Education Department. They are Judith Schumacher and Cassandra (Chris) Grissom.

Judith Schumacher has been a part-time instructor at Marian since 1984. She specializes in Elementary Education and Reading. Schumacher graduated from Butler University with her master's degree having done her undergraduate work at Indiana University. She is originally from Marion, IN, but moved to Indianapolis when she was five years old. The mother of four hopes people remember that, "I cared about them and wanted to help them learn and explore, and I hoped to give encouragement." The people at Marian are what Schumacher likes most about Marian, and not just students, but the faculty and staff, as well.

Chris Grissom teaches Elementary and Special Education. Grissom has taught part-time in the evenings on and off since 1979 while she taught full-time in the Indianapolis Public Schools. The Dayton, Ohio native really loves the whole atmosphere of Marian College. The small classes encourage her to get to know the students well. Currently, Grissom is on leave from IPS to earn her doctorate degree at I.U. Grissom hopes that her love of teaching overflows into her students.

Complaints from St. Francis

We, living in Saint Francis are somewhat disgusted with the simple household chores that don't seem to find any priority with the maintenance department here.

It has been over a week since the bathrooms have been cleaned. They are dirty, they stink, and they are extremely unsanitary. It is "great" to go into the shower, get out, and have to stand in month-old hair, dirt and whatever else to dry one's self. Also, we can't leave our room doors open due to the swarm of bees that have taken nest in the trash chutes due to the pile up of rubbish collected there.

We're not asking for any big favors. We just want to enjoy the same services we received in Clare and Doyle. We are paying extra to live here and receiving below adequate house-keeping services. If not changed, we will make a formal complaint to the president of the college about the inadequate and unhealthy standards of living.

Zip Code

Faculty, staff, and students,

Please inform those who send you mail, Marian College has a zip code. It is 46222. The nine digit zip code is 46222-1997. I hope I won't see so many yellow stickers on letters telling us about addresses and zip codes as I have seen this past month.

Thanks again, Sr. Rosemary Lee.

Mail

Dear Students:

I wish to thank you for having your family and friends write your Hall name each card or letter you receive. Please keep it up! If you receive newspapers or magazines, please inform the newspapers and magazines editors of your correct-full address.

I hope those who forgot about it will tell their family and friends to follow your good example. It makes mail easier to do and you will get letters faster.

Many thanks, Sr. Rosemary Lee

Senior profile

by Beth Peter

"Accounting majors aren't boring people," commented Lucy Griner. She would really like to dispel that stigma. It is a stereotype that this senior accounting major considers to be completely unfounded.

Griner comes to Marian from Brownsburg High School. She is the youngest of five children in the family and helped to continue a family tradition by attending Marian, following her older sisters who also graduated from Camp M.

The last three years have proven to be very busy for Griner. During her sophomore and junior years, she was treasurer for her class and this year she is president of the senior class. She has been a member of the Accounting Society and the Carbon staff. This is her second year as Tutor Supervisor with the Transition Center.

She has been active with a co-op program for the past two summers. The first job was with a government agency. The second was with Inland Container Corp. Griner considers both of these to be very good experiences. "It is good that we have these programs at Marian because it gives us a step up when we get into the job market."

Griner has enjoyed Marian because of the personal atmosphere that comes with a small school and its location relatively close to her home. She likes how it is easy to get involved in activities.

"You can really make a difference here," she said, "You're not just a number. Also, the faculty and students are super."

After graduation, Griner plans to work on a master's degree while working. She hopes to teach accounting on the college level. She will take the Certified Managerial Accountant exam instead of the Certified Public Accountant exam, since she would be happier working with a private business than with a public accounting firm.

and Cora West are all new full-time junior year faculty for the BSN program.

Juanita Brand worked in obstetrics and gynecology for 13 years. Although she has never taught in a college, the I.U. graduate has been an in-service educator for nursing professionals. Originally from the small town of Morristown, the mother of one is very impressed by the small atmosphere of Marian. In her spare time, Brand likes to camp, be in the woods and play racquetball.

Margaret Mc Dermott has taught in many colleges and universities including Loyola, Villanova, Case Western and most recently, I.U. Although she was born and raised in New York State, nearly her entire career has been in the Midwest.

The Mt. St. Vincent graduate likes the challenge of the new BSN program and enjoys the "smaller numbers of well-qualified students." She feels she has come full circle, having attended a small school and now teaching at one. Mc Dermott loves to travel, and when she has time likes to read, sew and work on crossword puzzles.

A specialist in medical surgical nursing, Cora West also is challenged by the feat of creating a new program in nursing. West has taught part-time in the Associate Nursing program at Marian for several years. Most recently, the die-hard Indianapolis Pacer fan was an administrator/branch manager of a health care agency in Indianapolis.

She loves the smaller student population, resulting in more individualization. The I.U. graduate is hoping to take some liberal arts coursed while here to increase her education. West is originally from Indianapolis.

House interns needed

State House -- The Indiana House of Representatives Republican staff is accepting applications for interns to serve during the 1990 General Assembly, announced House Republican Speaker Paul S. Mannweiler (R-Indianapolis).

The House will be selecting 15 interns to work with the Republican staff during the legislative session beginning in early January. Ten of the interns will help Republican representatives with constituent casework and research, and the remaining interns will assist the legislators with media relations.

Mannweiler encouraged all interested college juniors, seniors, graduates and graduate students to apply. Applications are available by writing to the Intern Selection Committee; Carolyn Wright, Chairman; Statehouse, Room 401-6; Indianapolis, IN 46204, or calling 1-800-382-9841 or 317-232-9632. The application deadline is October 6.

St. Vincent Hospital awards nursing scholarships

by Lynn Olhman

(taken from Topics Suburban)

The nursing staff at St. Vincent Hospital bid farewell to the summer crop of nurse externs at an outdoor picnic earlier this month.

Some of the students won't be back to work in the hospital until next summer, but others plan to be on board at the hospital during their shorter vacations from school this year during the Christmas holidays and spring breaks.

St. Vincent no longer operates a school to train and graduate student nurses. That came to an end years ago.

But the major northside healthcare facility needed other ways to attract candidates to their door. So they started a student extern program several years ago.

"The student nurse extern program was started to provide an on-the-scene training ground for college nursing students for work side-by-side with professionals in their industry and develop the varied nursing skills that their classroom textbooks can't provide," said student recruiter Michelle Phillips.

"Students pursuing nursing have no patient contact or care," Phillips said. "The student nurse extern program gives these people a chance to spend time in a hospital."

With the number of candidates to all health care institutions in the marketplace declining, the hospital nursing staff at St. Vincent Hospital feels it attracts the best potential candidates by paying the nursing students who qualify for the program. They are assigned to general patient care tasks such as changing beds, giving baths and performing more advanced tasks with a registered nurse present.

The project has paid off this year with the addition of a nurse apprentice level which enrolled about 70 students.

Phillips said students just out of high school who where ready to pursue nursing studies at a college this fall were interviewed and hired.

"There are three levels of the student nurse program, and students progress to the different levels," Phillips said.

"We have 70 student nurses and are a training ground for I.U.'s and other colleges' nursing schools. Of course, we hope that they will like it here, like us and the people they work with so they'll stay on board when they graduate from college."

To help insure an adequate number of skilled nurses to serve the hospital, the St. Vincent Hospital Guild awards nursing scholarships. The guild recently named Tamara Jones, a Marian College nursing student, and Patricia Hughes of Ball State University as recipients of a $5,000 nursing scholarship.

Scholarships of $3,000 each were awarded to Megan Alerding of Purdue, Carolyn Bailor, Blanche Smith and Bruce Rosen of IUPUI and Julie Hanley and Mary Jo Cunningham of Marian.

Bonds sold

Marian College sold $1.3 million in tax exempt bonds in a deal that closed Sept. 6, according to Chief Financial Officer Don Fleming.

The twenty-year bonds were issued by the Indiana Educational Facilities Authority and were sold Aug. 22 at an interest rate of 7.37 percent. Bank One, Indianapolis, NA, was the underwriter in the deal. They purchased the entire bond allotment and, in turn, will resell them to retail buyers.

The bond-holders will then depend on Marian College for payment on the bonds, which will mature serially.

IEFA issues such bonds for any teaching institution in Indiana.

The money gained from these sales will repay the Marian College Endowment Fund the $1 million borrowed to fund the renovation of St. Francis Hall and the construction of two faculty residences, according to Fleming.

Campus Security changes parking stickers, warns against towing

by Stacey Nicholas

Responding to student concerns, Campus Security has changed the type of warning ticket that is issued to illegally parked cars.

Previously, the stickers were fluorescent red and resembled a bumper sticker. Officers would place the warning on a car's windshield. Students often complained to resident assistants about the difficulty in removing the warning's adhesive.

"I had the officers bend up the edge of the sticker so they'd be easier to remove. The warnings came off completely if they were pulled gently. Unfortunately, most students yanked them off and the adhesive was left behind," said Security Chief Bob Elliot.

The new warning stickers have only two strips of adhesive and the adhesive is not as strong. Campus Security will still have record of all the cars that have received warnings.

Elliot concluded the interview by saying, "After they (the demolition crew) finish tearing down the Park School Gym, the officers are really going to start cracking down on illegally parked cars... They can either receive a ticket or be towed."

Hochstetler named new head librarian

by Tina Kunkler

Donald Hochstetler began his position as head librarian for Marian College Aug. 14.

The Kokomo native has several years experience in library administration having worked one year in a public library in his hometown, five years in an academic library at Central Methodist College in Mo., and in a public services library as coordinator of public services at Missouri Western State College.

Hochstetler holds a bachelor of arts degree and a master of arts degree in history from Indiana University. He earned his doctor of philosophy in history at Michigan State University and later his master of library science from IU.

Having taught college for a period, Hochstetler recognizes the importance of a quality library for students. His goals include making the library "a more integral part of the teaching of the college."

He plans to reveal the resources available at the library such as the special collection, computer searching, magazine article summaries and inter-library loan services.

Hochstetler believes the library should be a place in which students can not only complete class work, but also read their own selections and relax from the pressures of the classroom. The library should be of service to the students first and foremost, to the faculty as teachers and as researchers, and to the community as a whole, said Hochstetler.

"It (Marian) is the kind of place I wanted to end up at," said Hochstetler, who now lives in Indianapolis with his wife and three children.

Donald Hochstetler

will help make the course less expensive for students; twenty five dollars less.

Craig stated, "We felt the literature assignments were too long and required too much reading and we wanted to include a few more writers."

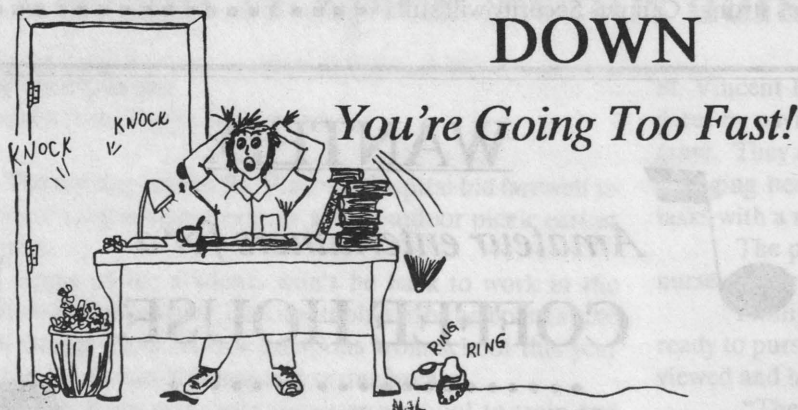

This year the class consists of three days of lecture and one day of small group discussion, as opposed to the four days of lecture of previous years. The small groups are 12-15 students led in discussion by a faculty member, allowing students to "speak their minds," which is almost impossible during lecture sessions. Professors rarely lead discussion groups on the college level themselves, but instead have teaching assistants to do it.

Humanities is one of the largest enrolled classes on campus. The morning class has 84 students and the afternoon session has a total of 53 students. Both are held in the library auditorium. There are 50 students in the night class which is held at St. Francis Hall.

Yvonne Spartz, sophomore, commented, "I hate Humanities, but I'm glad I don't have to read 17 books."

"I much prefer the format of last year because I'd rather read the actual books than segments from them which are in the text," said Greg Knipe.

When it rains; it pours. Analogies such as the Morton Salt advertisement help me laugh in unexpected and sometimes unpleasant situations.

After Mass Saturday night, Stacey Nicholas and I settled down for breadsticks and a couple hours of watching the tube. Suddenly, her phone chirped and I heard her say, "Sure, I'll go check the basement for puddles and I'll call you back."

We could take a simple walk-about through the basement and be back before the commercial is over, or so we thought. As we turned the corner from the elevator, however, Lake Francis spread out in the corridor before us.

For half an hour we mopped the floors and took the sopping rugs out on the back steps to drain. Slime from the rubber-backed rugs covered our hands and mud splashed on our legs.

"I feel like Cinderella when she couldn't go to the ball," I said, thinking of the dance in Clare Hall that night. Only, instead of mice gathering about us, we had crickets.

"But who is the fairy godmother, Prince Charming, and the wicked step-mother?" asked Stacey, interrupting my childhood reversion. It didn't matter. I was tired of that analogy and went on to Noah's Ark, "It rained four hours and forty minutes."

"And the animals came two by two; to mop up the mess," continued my co-worker. So that didn't quite fit, either, I decided.

Stacey then came back with, "And God held out his mop and parted the Red Sea for the Israelites to pass through." The only characters missing were the Israelites.

Finally, I borrowed from "The Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner" and used literary license, "Water, water everywhere and not a drop to drink. Water, water everywhere; why didn't it land in the sink?"

Isn't it a small world?

(from the Admissions Office)

It would appear that the town of Rensselaer, Indiana, and its school has a monopoly on the sophomore class of Marian College in Indianapolis whether by accident or by design. It is a story of four young lads who were inseparable during their elementary years as classmates and friends and who separated only to be reunited on the Marian campus.

Today, the president of the sophomore class is James Verbrugge, a graduate of North Side High School in Muncie. Verbrugge attended the elementary schools in Rensselaer before his family moved to Muncie. The vice president of the class is Peter Hoover and the Treasurer is Gary Sheffer, both 1988 graduates of Rensselaer High School.

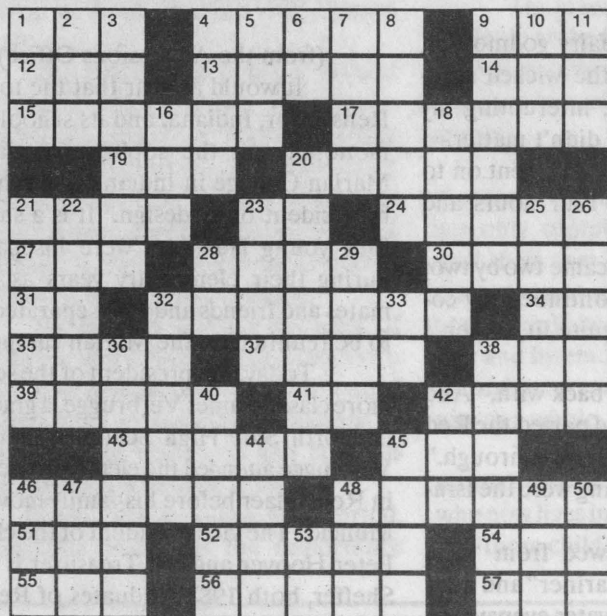

It would appear the secretary's position might be lost to Rensselaer since Kevin Wing holds that office, and he is a graduate of Otsego High School in Otsego, Michigan. However, on closer examination of Wing's background, it is noted that he attended Rensselaer High School through his high school junior year and moved to Otsego only in time to graduate there.

While again both Scheffer and Hoover planned on attending Marian together, neither knew that Wing and Verbrugge had chosen the Indianapolis school. To further make an interesting story, neither Wing nor Verbrugge knew any of the other three had chosen Marian. What a surprise when all four who had been such close friends throughout their elementary career met on the Marian campus for the first time and discovered all of them had chosen the same school.

Now during their second year of college, all of them with the Rensselaer school connection are providing the leadership for their sophomore class.
