FROM THE MASSES

To the editors of the Carbon,
I have asked the Academic Affairs Committee to reconsider the current "pass/fail" policy. I personally feel that the present policy is a poor one, and I would like to see it abolished.

As I understand the present policy, it was designed to enable a student to take a course (usually 200 - level), in fields other than his major, without worrying about a grade which might be jeopardizing because of competition with majors in the chosen course.

It has been my experience that many of the students who choose to take courses on the pass/fail basis add nothing to the classroom situation, and, in fact, may detract from it. It is not at all uncommon to find such students in a course in which they have no interest at all. They do not read assignments for the course, they contribute little, if any, to classroom discussion, and they can get by with a D- for the course.

I wish to emphasize that not all students who choose to take a course pass/fail fall into the above category. I fully agree with the idea that a student should take 200- level courses in areas other than his major. However, I feel that he should either take such courses for a grade, or audit them.

It has been my experience that those students who take courses pass/fail for the "stated" reason (i.e. to learn something in a field on which they have an interest) usually do well in the course. Those who take a course pass/fail because it is "an easy 3 hours" usually learn very little.

I have no objection to students who look for "an easy way out". However, I do object if these students contribute to a classroom atmosphere which is detrimental to students who are not looking for "an easy way out".

Nine of the Theatre Dept.'s hardest members, selected for athletic as well as acting ability, are set for roles in "See How Run", the farce-comedy to open a six performance run in Marian Hall Auditorium Sept. 26, 27, 28 and October 3, 4, and 5.

Since this production will be staged in the intimate "arena" style, seating for each performance will be limited to 90 persons. Reservations should be made at the Information Office. MC students and faculty will be admitted free with ID.

The word "run" in the title is not figurative, says director Don Johnson, who warns that not only the comedy but the actors are fast-moving in earnest.

Jim Ward and Dianne Irk will have the leading roles in this non-stop romp. They will be seen as Clive Winton and Penelope Teop, respectively, one an American GI in England and the other an actress with whom he had formerly acted, now the wife of a vicar. It is the harmless date the pair have one evening that sparks the comic confusion that becomes steadily more involved until it amounts to uproarious pandemonium.

No one is quite sure of anyone else's identity as five gentlemen gallop in and out of the four doors of the vicarage -- all attired in the garments of the clergy! One of these is the GI and erstwhile actor, one an escaped prisoner, and still another the vicar Teop himself. Finally, there is the seber-faced bishop, trying hard to keep his composure as lunacy appears to overtake the vicarage.

Stephen Langdon, Gary Asher, Kathy Donohue, Maggie Shuehan, Mark Trierweiler, Greg Bauer, and George Tate will be seen in supporting comedy roles in "See How They Run".

Dear Carben,

Some of your "comments", Caricatures, and cuts are appropriate and are taken by the public in good humor. But it was in very poor taste to deface the article in last week's Carbon about Prayer, Discussion, etc. (written by a organized campus committee) by so rudely stripping the whole meaning of a certain word by your sketch of a K.K.K. member.

I can understand placing private jokes, cutting articles, or just plain "bull" in your paper but why do you have to take a serious informative article (as the one asking us "Where do you want to go") and completely leaving the basic purpose of what it said into a disgusting example of your sick humor. Maybe the article did not mean that much to the "artist" who displayed his "talent" but it did mean something to me.

A motion was made and seconded to make the Pres. the rep. to the sub-committee.

CRUEX CORNER

After two weeks of I.M. Softball, many strange things have happened down by the lake. Evil Bill Platt attempted to jump the lake on a borrowed bike--- he failed. The league leading Ozone Rangers are under investigation by Commissioner Tom Schreth for possible use of an illegal player.

Mondays game saw the Rangers hand the Balls of Fire their first loss; as the Zipper Heads squeezed by the Brew Ha Ha's in the last innings and F.A.S.T. beat the Mind Friars in the first. Wednesday saw the Balls beat the Heads, the Rangers get by the Brew Ha Ha's, and the Floating Nurds dropped F.A.S.T.

Just three more games remain in the regular season, then the tourney starts with the top four teams competing.

Until we can straighten
this thing out,
Mellow

The Standings:

Ozone Rangers	4-0
Balls of Fire	3-1
F.A.S.T.	2-2
Brew Ha Ha's	1-2
Zipper Heads	1-2
Floating Nurds	1-3
Mind Friars	0-3

Womens Sports

Well folks, another exciting week of Marian College Women's Intramural Volleyball has been completed. Last weeks undefeated teams still remain "tops"... but not for long! Next week should prove to be very interesting in League B's standings. B.S. Bombers plan to 'sert out' Mixed Bag on Monday and then go on to plunge the Dip Shits down the john on Wednesday. League A may not have an individual leader until the last game of the season when Schucks garden intermingle with the Fruits.

That's all for now. See you at the courts...

J.S. & H.B.

League A

1. Schucks Garden	4-0
2. Fruits	3-0
3. Klutzes	3-1
4. Rookies	2-2
5. Wazuri	2-1
6. Us'n	1-2
7. Wild Women	1-3
8. Mother Earth	0-3
9. Klumas	0-4

League B

1. Dipshits	4-0
2. B.S. Bombers	3-0
3. Mixed Bag	3-0
4. Seven Dwarfs	3-1
5. R.A.P.I.D	1-2
6. Froph's	1-3
7. Chicken Fat	1-3

Trivia time. I'm sure that not many people realize that on this day in 1949, George Orwell's classic novel, 1984, was first published. This little known fact, may or may not be true. Who cares, anyway? But that is why the Carbon is paying tribute to this great novelist.

From 1949 to the present, this novel has amused and frightened us. There are probably very few people on this campus who have either not read or know of 1984. Since the year 1984 is only 9 years away, we decided to remind you that Orwell did exist and that he wrote a novel that may be more pertinent to your life on this campus than most of you realize.

We have our opinions, and I'm sure you have yours. So if you'd care to express it, drop us a line.

The Editors

It was a bright, cold February morning and the tower clock was striking eight-thirty. Winston hurried across campus to make his sociology class "The Family of Man". He was late for the third time in a week.

As he walked along the path, Winston watched the closed circuit cameras follow his steps. He knew somebody, somewhere, was taking note of his tardiness.

Minutes later, Winston entered the classroom and caused an interruption by slamming the door. The Professor glanced disapprovingly in Winston's general direction. Winston slinked into the first open seat and made a valiant effort to appear attentive. It was to no avail. He soon began day-dreaming about flying to San Francisco. These were stopped when the loud-speaker was switched on with pep.

"Winston Blair to the Office of the Academic Dean."

"Winston Blair to the Office of the Academic Dean."

With the eyes of his classmates and professor on him, Winston walked out of the room. Once in the hall he wondered what the Dean wanted. The only thing which came to mind was his frequent tardiness.

There wasn't a student on campus who liked the thought of speaking to the Academic Affairs Dean. It was generally believed she was a blood relative of Big Sister herself. The Dean was a small, white-haired old lady who wore wireless glasses and spoke in a squeaky voice. She wore the purple arm band which signified affiliation with the state religion. The Dean had once been a ranking official in the Ministry of Love until she had fallen out of favor with Big Sister.

Winston was musing over the Dean's virginity in her office when she came in and began moving swiftly around the room and speaking at the same time.

"Well Winston, I'm afraid there have been several bad reports about your behavior. The Student Services Office has observed you've been late for class 15 times since the beginning of the semester. This is not good but could be overlooked if it weren't for your other lapses into maladaptation."

She produced a bundle from beneath a desk and began to shove its contents at Winston.

"In this address book, we have found you have ties with people known for subversive thought and non-conformity. These tapes and pictures confirm our suspicions. In your notebooks from last year we have repeatedly discovered anti-Big Sister slogans. This behavior cannot be continued."

She reached out with her right hand and placed it on Winston's arm. He felt the needle pierce his skin and jumped at the pain. A numbing effect began immediately and Winston slumped back into his chair. He had been drugged. Consciousness was already slipping away but the woman spoke on.

"Big Sister has decided to send you back to shaping school in order to correct this behavior problem. If your attitude improves you will eventually return to the college. We hope this is a temporary situation."

One hundred and four days later, Winston awoke on a spring afternoon. He felt a warm sense of contentment as he smiled and stretched his arms. He was hoping to see his behavioral instructor but was disappointed.

His visit to the shaping school had been successful. His instructor had told him that he would be going back to college soon. The state had spent a lot of money to rehabilitate him, but it had been worthwhile. Winston had learned he must become a working part of the college community before he could hope to function in the life he was preparing for after graduation.

Big Sister was no longer the tyrannical symbol of authority. Winston viewed her as a benevolent mother-figure which could comfort him in times of weakness. This, after all, was how Big Sister viewed herself. Winston had learned to love Big Sister.
