EDITORIAL

President Nixon has until May 30 to decide whether or not he will comply with the House Judiciary Committee's subpoena for tapes of 42 of Nixon and his aides conversations. His reply whatever it may be, is vitally important in shaping the course of impeachment proceedings. Along with his decision, rests the fate of the Republican Party in next fall's elections.

As I see it, the President has three choices: 1) Refuse to give up the tapes. If he does this, Congress will have grounds for impeachment. The President will fight for his decision to keep the tapes in court. Litigation could possibly last for several months. 2) Hand over the tapes. By giving in the President would be providing the Committee with a massive amount of material to examine. The investigation would be prolonged and detailed. The Democratic National Committee Chairman estimated that if a Senate trial on impeachment charges were held it would be going on as late as December. 3) Turn over a written transcript of the tapes, deleting whatever he decides is not pertinent to the case. By doing this Nixon will alienate many of the members of the senate. As Senator Charles Percy of Illinois stated, if the President does not fully live up to the demands of the subpoenas, I interpret this to be an "obstruction of justice". Again a lengthy court battle would ensue. Reports from Washington indicate that the third choice is the most likely course of action the President will take.

There seems to be little hope that the question of Presidential impeachment can be resolved before election day next November. It appears to me that the President is taking the Republican Party down along with him. There is proof to back up my statement. In the last few months there has been five special Congressional elections. Of these elections, four seats went to the Democratic candidates. In the last special election the Republicans lost a deadsure Congressional seat in Michigan. The main issue of the campaign was Nixon. The President even made a special trip to campaign for the Republican candidate, but that did not help much. Since it seems highly unlikely that the Impeachment issue will be resolved before November, the Republican Party will have a major loss in the fall elections. Up until now I have had my doubts about whether the President should leave his office. But now I believe the President should resign immediately, before he destroys the two party political system in America.

FROM THE MASSES:

Dear Carbon

After an exhaustive campaign and succinct but tense election, I have finally conquered my greatest objective at Marian; I am the President, make no mistake about it. I knew that catchy slogan "A girl in every room, a beer in every hand" would sway the freshman men's vote in my favor. The landslide victory was only temporarily euphoric however, for I soon realized two things; first, I ran unopposed, and second, the presidency is a helluva lot of work which requires eons of precious extracurricular time.

The power and glory associated with my office immediately inflated my ego. In a temporary fit of psychopathic extroversion, I actually asked a few literate students to relate their most disheartening grievances concerning the social atmosphere of Marian College. I received two typical replies; either they told me to "bug off" (although in their case the word "bug" began with an "F" and ended with a "K"), or else I was told that everyone on campus is too apathetic so that even a worthy attempt to provide community entertainment would be immediately stifled. In fact, many of the students (besides seniors) who are leaving this year say that this is one of their reasons for going to another school; Obviously, that is a paradoxical reason, since they are the same students who sit on their inane butts and complain about the apathy, but don't give a damn themselves. I can only say "good riddance" to those students. For the rest of us who are stuck here, the only possible way to accomplish anything is not to complain but do something about it.

Now is an excellent opportunity to get involved; old committees are dissolving, and students are needed to fulfill positions on the new ones. WE NEED PEOPLE.

If you have any questions concerning committee membership, function, or openings, feel free to call me at ext. 302 or ext. 273.

Dear Carbon:

The role of the resident assistant at Marian College is seen by many as being similar to that of a cop tending his beat, pacing the streets to arrest and prosecute in order to satisfy his sadistic desires.

Stereotypically, the RA is pictured as an oversized, gruff-speaking red neck with a black belt in some violent form of East Asian self-defense and, to round thing off, a closed mind or, as so many have been led to believe from the graffiti on the prison walls in the Dean's office.

The time put in by a resident assistant working on the wing, the hair-raising predicaments he or she encounters, and the sense of responsibility which is gained by taking a position such as this one combine themselves together and result in a learning experience which no gray-haired doctor or professor could teach from a text. No one knows better the intensity of frustration than the schizoid RA, half student- half administrator; a freak of nature; a natural phenomena in a human mold; a Marian College student who lives it up at the golf course parties just as much as the next guy, and gets just as sick.

Whoever coined the phrase "People are strange" must have really known his stuff, because people have got to be the strangest combination of ingredients ever mixed in the same bowl. Just like everything else, they are available in a wide variety of colors, sizes, flavors, etc, etc... But then how much fun would it be if everyone were just alike? Thank God for such mutations-from-the-norm as are seen in the resident assistant. After all, someone has to play the role of the underdog.

Dear Carbon

My freshman year at Marian (1971) I, along with a few other day and dorm students, was very concerned about the decor of the Perc and the problem of dorm-day student relations. From this concern a committee was formed with the help of Linda Kolb, called the Perc Renovation Committee. As a committee nothing could be done because there was no way of raising money to do anything. As a result the committee, with the approval of Student Board became a club, the SAC Facilities Club.

As a club, we were able to have a certain amount of money making activities. However, the money earned was not nearly enough for any great improvements. The club tried improvements, such as making sure restrooms were supplied with the needed facilities and that vending machines were reported if not operating correctly, made ash trays which were lacking, out of catfood cans, curtains for the bare windows, old but improved furniture for the lounge, arranged to have a clock put into the eating area (which has now been stolen) and several other small improvements. The club had only one activity at school, but it was a great success. The S.F.C. along with the music club, held a coffee house on Friday 13, October, 1972. The coffee house, with a cost of 13¢ to enter, offered good music, free popcorn and a reduced rate on drinks and prizes. The coffee house drew the biggest crowd that Marian has ever seen at such an event. I felt that the club was at least, for one night successful. However, much of the work done by the club was done by me alone and soon I became distraught, feeling that no-one else was interested in the club or its purpose. As a result the club folded.

Now, as a Senior a dream began as freshmen is finally coming true. I was very impressed when I found that Marian College students were interested and were finally making great moves toward improving the appearance and student relations. As a senior, and a day student, I would like to thank all of these who helped to make the Perc what it is and what it will become. I hope that now dorm student and day students will each make a great effort to know each other.

L.K.

A Brief History of the Steel Pigs

Today, very few people in the modern world know any useful facts of the once sacred and popular steel pigs. I have taken upon myself the burden of educating you, the ignorant public, on the vital importance of these metallic wonders.

The steel pig was first discovered in the Himalayas in the 16th century by Water Polo, Marco's younger brother, who was in search of the ever elusive Alaskan pipeline. Young Polo was fascinated by these strange creatures which ran about in very tiny circles. So he captured two for scientific investigation. While stopping for the night at a cheap hotel, a tall stranger stole the specimens from the blind Venician who was standing guard. He returned later that night and stole the steel pigs too.

Nothing was heard about the steel pigs for the next twenty years. Then the noted Ukranian Physicist U.R. Apanteen dee Az, announced that the steel pigs population was on the upswing since the introduction of the first workable trout mask.

It was a steel pig that first cried "Land Ho" on Columbus's Santa Maria. The ship had hardly put out to sea. Columbus then introduced the steel pig to the Indians, and then his daughter, who introduced Columbus to a tall Indian, who had a large part of the mid-west named after him. The Indian married Columbus's daughter and named a village after his father in law. The Indians traded the steel pigs to the grizzly bears for Manhattan.

Then William H. Gage taught the steel pig how to start automobiles and that brings us up to where we started.

...much later on, William H. Gage taught the steel pig how to start automobiles. But alas, the marks of the steel pigs have made on our lives are too beautiful to mention.

Well, Marian College sports fans, the Intramural Softball season is coming down to the wire, and the excitement is building to amazing proportions! After Sunday's and Monday's contests, there are only eight teams left to battle for those coveted plastic goodies. Four teams wilted under the intense pressure of the championship competition. These teams include the Ludes, (who just Luded-out), Faculty, Women Libbers, and Sisters of Love. The big game of the week will be between the only remaining undefeated teams: The Gods of Half-Barrels and Sarge's Raiders. I'll have to pick the Gods for the simple reason that they are the Gods(?). The remaining games are as follows: Warm Benchers vs. Spark Plugs, Balls of Fire vs. Streakers. The winner (and I do mean Winner) of the Warm Benchers vs. Spark Plugs game will earn the right to play the Jocks and the victor of the Gods vs. Raiders game and whoever can make it through the other "jungle". I refuse to make a prediction on the "jungle" games - your guess is as good as mine - especially after last week's predictions!
