Marian's theatre season looks promising

by Matt McGreal

Auditions were held last week for the season's first play "How the Other Half Loves," a British farce about modern love. Written by British playwright Allen Ayborn, this story takes place in overlapping living rooms, and reveals the irony and humor behind today's relationships. The theater department's own Dr. Jack Sederholm will be directing this production which will play in Peine Theater in Fisher Hall October 11-14.

All plays are free to all students. The Theater Department encourages everyone to come out and enjoy their fine productions. If anyone would like to offer any assistance to a production please contact someone in the Department. Users, Artists and stagecraft assistants are only a few of the needs.

The remainder of the season will bring these fine productions to the Marian Campus:

Charlottes Web Dec. 4-8
Director-David Ratts

Once Upon a Mattress Feb. 27-Mar.1
Director-Bernie Killiam
Musical Director-Sara Reid
Choreographer-Craig Calloway

Antigone Apr. 23-26
Director-Miki Mathioudakis

Ms. Mathioudakis plans to take the final production on tour to Crete Greece this summer.

This year's lineup holds great promise, and the lead role is that of the Marian students. Come out and watch. Front row or backstage, it will be a great year.

Marian welcomes new faculty members

by Krissy Abel

For the 91-92 academic year, Marian has added 18 new faculty and staff members, including the new Dean for Academic Affairs, Louis Friedman, O.S.F., Ph.D.

Sister Louis, who is a member of the Sisters of St. Francis of Dubuque, Iowa, obtained her master's degree and doctorate in English from Purdue University. She has taught college English and writing courses at several institutions and has held many administrative positions. Her most recent position was at Fayetteville State College as Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

A former graduate of Marian, Ann Beckett, R.N., B.S.N., is the new Nursing Lab Manager and Lecturer in Nursing. Ann has served as Clinical Instructor in Pediatrics at Marian and has held nursing positions at Community Hospital and Dearborn County Hospital. Ann is continuing with her masters degree at Indiana University-Purdue University in Indianapolis with a focus on the Nursing of Adults with Biodis-somance.

Kelly Buck, R.N., M.S.N., is the new Assistant Professor of Nursing for the Associate Nursing program. Kelly obtained her M.S.N. in Adult Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing from Indiana University. She was formerly Staff Development Coordinator at St. Vincent Stress Center.

Laurel Camp, the new Assistant Professor of Psychology, holds a doctorate in Experimental Psychology from the University of Colorado. She has taught at the University of Colorado in Boulder, Mankato State University of Minnesota, and Gustavus

Adolphus College, St. Peter, Minnesota.

The new instructor in Theology is Michael Clark, who has a master's from Boston College and is presently writing his doctoral dissertation. Michael formerly taught at the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minn., and was a teaching assistant at Boston College. Before that he previously taught high school at Sts. Peter and Paul High School in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

Brett Cope, the new Assistant Professor of Physical Education and Director of Athletic Training, received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from Indiana University. Formerly at the Center for Hip and Knee Surgery in Mooresville, In., Brett had also been an Athletic Trainer for Brownsburg and Ben Davis High Schools.

Joseph Dell Aquila, the Associate Professor of Physics and Chairperson of the Chemistry/Physics Department, recently was Scientific Consultant for IAQ Products, Inc. in Rockland, Mass. Joseph, who holds a doctorate in Physics, has taught at Louisiana Scholars' College at Northwest-

Concerns over work study examined

by Karen Walsh

What are students complaining about now? Like the title of Gilda Radner's biography, it's always something. If it's not the "food" in the cafeteria, it's the hundreds of pages professors expect students to read each night, or lately, financial matters. One of the ways students can obtain money around campus is through the work study program. What's the program all about? Alice Sherfick, assistant director of financial aid, was able to give some answers to questions most commonly shed and also some insight into those areas about which students most often complain because they are unaware of the system and how it works.

Typically, a student will fill out one of those twenty page forms that asks everything about his life except his blood type (formally known as the financial aid form) and if he is one of the lucky ones, he will be offered work study as part of his award. At Marian, 30% of the student population who has financial aid of some sort has work study as part of his financial package. The award offered is a monetary one such as $500 per year. To figure the number of hours per week a student will get to work, one divides the number of weeks in a semester by the monetary award and the minimum wage.

The typical work study student lives on campus and attends school on a full-time basis. Two-hundred twenty two Marian students are on work study this year, which adds up to almost half the number who live on campus. There are sixteen students on a waiting list who are not on work study. So why can't these people fill in at the places where they're short of workers, like the computer center? The answer lies in the fact that Marian has already used its allotted money to be used, and if Marian students work more hours than the government allows, Marian has to make up the monetary difference. Because of this, the Financial Aid office is faced with a tough decision: either to use the allotted money to "spread the wealth" to as many students as possible or to award more work study hours to fewer students.

All work study students are paid minimum wage, which is currently $4.25 an hour. Some feel their awards are less this year, but most awards are the same as was set their freshman year unless the student requested a change. The number of hours one works may have decreased because the minimum wage is higher, but the monetary award is most likely going to be the same all four years. One student reflecting on the increased minimum wage said, "At first you think you may actually get ahead once wages are increased. Unfortunately, it never works that way. The cost of living and education continues to increase. It's true the minimum wage also increases, but the number of hours is simply decreased so that you're no better off than you were before."

One hears students complaining about the few hours they get to work, yet some don't bother to show up for work. Others complain about it being a waste of time because in the big picture, what is $400 when one has to pay

$10,000? Not many of these complaints actually make it to the financial aid office, however. From the feedback Alice has received, she feels most students are satisfied with the program. She noted that the satisfaction is not necessarily a monetary one, but that it stems from a student worker feeling he is important and needed in the place he works.

Alice also wanted to point out that there are more students who do not use their full award than there are students who request more hours. For those students who either do not qualify for work study or who need additional hours, there are other options available. For example, a student can work for ARA, ELS, or in the tutoring program.

If most students are like me, a few hours per week is all they can handle with their other responsibilities and the extra money can come in handy. As one student put it, "At least it helps with gas money."

Just A Thought

by N.M. Gasco

Move over Arsenio Hall, here comes Ron Reagan!

One surprise Nicole recently encountered occurred when she turned on her television. There, before her very eyes, was "The Ron Reagan Show." Now if Ronald's son was going to have a show, Nicole would have expected it to be called "The Ronald Reagan II Show," "The Ronnie Jr. Show," or perhaps more appropriately, "The Gong Show."

Now this program is not to be confused with "Bedtime for Bonzo," (a movie Nicole hopes will soon be revived) or the various Ronald McDonald commercials on television, although all are very similar. But, Ron Reagan has one big difference that sets him above the rest. That man has control with a capital C.

The problem is that Nicole hasn't figured out exactly what it is that he controls. She knows it isn't his temper, and it certainly can't be the audience, let alone the program's structure and format. It could be his wardrobe, but even that seems doubtful. She would say that he now has control over a part of the media but if that were the case, it seems unlikely that he would willingly pick a 1:00 a.m. time slot in which to air his program. Then again, with the amount and type of viewers sitting, or rather sleeping in front of the television at that hour, I suppose he doesn't have to worry about them noticing the fact that he stares into the camera more than he stares into the mirror or that he reads his cue cards during commercials rather than talking to his guests, or that it would appear, due to his teeth, that he may be related to a vampire. The latter could be one explanation for the early time slot (Now there's a story for the Weekly World News).

But, those are just some of the highlights. While most talk shows simply allow the audience to ask questions, Ron actually GIVES his audience the microphone- to keep, free of charge (no one could accuse him of being selfish). Not only do they get to call Ron names (such as a liar, though Nicole can't imagine why anyone would do such a thing), they also get to question his sexuality and argue with him on camera. It sure beats Donahue.

Poor Ron. Whenever he tries to speak, someone in the audience expects him to defend his father. But, as he put it, "I wasn't the one elected." He must have saw the Nielson Ratings. Nicole certainly doesn't remember nominating Ron Reagan as the best new television host for 1991. Yet, there he is, and there goes America.

State Board of Education approves new program for Marian

On September 5th, the Indiana State Board of Education approved a new program in Mild Disabilities for the Education Department.

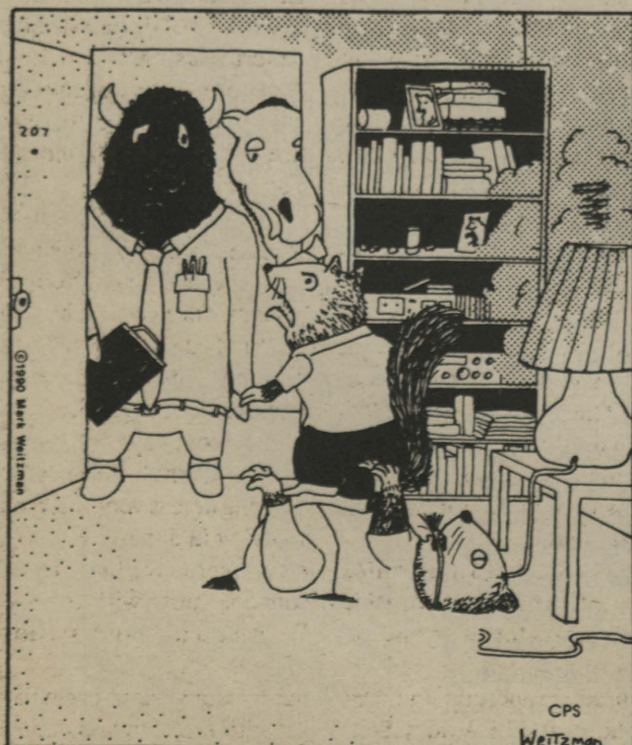

This program will allow students majoring in early childhood, elementary education, or one of the secondary education areas to add certification in Mild Disabilities to their license, thereby preparing them to teach children who are mildly mentally handicapped or learning disabled. According to Joyce Johnstone, chairman of the Education Department, "More and more children with mild disabilities are mainstreamed into the regular classroom, and our graduates who have this minor will be better prepared to meet the needs of these children in their classrooms. Students earning this minor can also serve as special education teachers for either mildly mentally handicapped or learning disabled students, or serve as a resource teacher in the school system."

Interested students should contact the Education Department.

"This wouldn't have happened if the vending machine here had a better selection."

Letter to the Editor

I am a commuter student. Contrary to popular belief, or at least that's the way it seems, some commuters, like myself, depend on the various vending machines scattered along campus as a means to make it through the day.

Unfortunately however, I do not look forward to actually paying money to receive candy that is anything but edible. I am not quite sure who is responsible or who one could complain to in order to get some results (my letter to the Carbon last year on this very subject obviously went unnoticed).

I've used the machines three times this year. The first time, I got a bag of M & M's that, literally, looked as though they were stepped on. The second time, I ended up with a melted Payday bar. This was most frustrating since I had to track across campus just to find change (the machine rejected my dollar bill). The last time I was disgusted to discover that my Raisinettes were... well, let's just say that stale would be an understatement. They certainly were not meant for human consumption and therefore ended up in the trash.

The reason I don't just eat at the cafeteria is all too obvious and fast food is too expensive to consume on a daily basis. So, when I am forced to remain on campus for prolonged periods of time, I would like to be able to have a temporary snack to hold me over until I can get some REAL food.

A hungry commuter ern State University and the College of Basic Studies at Boston University, and was Director of the Clarke Observatory in Yankton, South Dakota.

Steve Dougherty, who holds a bachelor's degree from Indiana University Northwest, In., is the new Assistant Professor of Biology. Steve had previously been the Assistant Instructor at IUPUI since 1985, and he expects to receive his Ph.D. in Anatomy this month. Steve taught students at the Med-Center during his graduate studies, and he will teach Anatomy and Physiology for both nursing programs.

The new Assistant Professor of Nursing in the BSN Program is Dorothy Gomez, a registered nurse who graduated from the University of Miami, Fla., with a master's degree. She has worked on the Emergency Department staff of several hospitals and participated in the Community Outreach Programs at the university of Massachusetts Medical Center.

Miki Mathioudakis, who holds a master's degree in Communications from the Christian Theological Seminary, is the new lecturer in Speech Communication and Theatre. A former part-time teacher and director for Marian, Miki is on a one-year assignment replacing Beth Taylor. Her past experience includes hosting a talk show and directing and instructing for the Junior Civic Theatre.

Ann Reaves, the new Assistant Professor of English, holds a doctorate in Medieval English and Celtic Literature from the University of Texas. Ann last taught Shakespeare, Renaissance Literature and Chaucer at the University of Texas at Tyler.

Faith Bauer-Tomich, the new Systems Analyst/Programmer, received her bachelor's degree in business administration and her master's degree from Ohio State University. Faith last worked at Ivy Tech College where she directed the implementation of their fully integrated computer system.

The resident director of Clare Hall is Natalie Cochran, who has a bachelor's degree from Indiana University-Purdue University in Indianapolis. Natalie is enrolled in the College Student Personnel graduate program at IUPUI.

Kelly F. Griffith, the new Assistant Librarian, received her bachelor's degree in biology from Marian and her master's degree in Library Science from Indiana University. Kelly will assist in bibliographic instruction, reference service, and circulation.

Michael Pankey, the new Resident Director of Doyle Hall, has recently graduated with a bachelor's degree from DePauw University. In the past, Michael has served as a University Peer Counselor and as Freshman Mentor.

St. Francis Hall's new Resident Director is Timothy Perraino, a graduate of Alma College in Michigan. Tim, who holds a bachelor's degree, will also be working part-time in the Athletic Department.

Melissa Skelton, a Marian College graduate, is the new Coordinator of the Student Advising/Mentor Program for the Business Administration Department. Melissa began this position in January, 1991.

Germany comes to Marian

by Holly Criss

The average American may never encounter a person from another country, unless either they live in a large city like New York or attend school with that person. Indianapolis is not an extremely large city like New York but we do get our fair share of those from other countries. One of the places you might run into someone from another country is right here at Marian.

Marian College is a host school for students from all over the world such as Istanbul, Saudi Arabia, Finland, and Morocco. The majority of our international students come from the Middle East, Central America, and Africa. We even have a student from Germany.

Her name is Cordula Kroeger and she is a sixteen year old Freshman from Lich, Germany, which is a small town near Frankfurt. Some people may think that someone her age is too young to be in college unless they are some kind of genius. Cordy is an exception. In Germany, the students attend school for thirteen years instead of twelve like we do in the U.S. For Cordy to be able to attend the university of her choice when she returns to Germany in about two years, she has to skip a year of school at home then her two years at Marian will be the end of her thirteen years of education. When asked about tape recording some of her classes she replied, "I only record global studies and algebra. I do not need to record basic English and French."

Cordy first came to Indianapolis when her father, who works for Eli Lilly, was transferred here from Germany. She was allowed to make the decision of which college in the city to attend. "My parents did go around and look at IUPUI, Butler and Marian. They told me that Marian had the friendliest people and the best curriculum. "Although Cordy does not have a major at Marian, she does have some plans in the future to possibly study languages or teach children with speech impediments. I also asked Cordy a little about her family. She has two sisters: Susanne, 19 and Annette, 11.

Cordy is always interested in meeting new people so if you cross paths with her all you have to do is look her way and more than likely she will say "hi" and smile.

Blue and gold hit it off

by Kristi Burleson

The Men's baseball team hit off their intrasquad season with three double-headers. The Gold team, made up of Seniors and Freshmen, has won two games. The Blue team, made up of Juniors and Sophomores, has won four games. Coach Bret Shambaugh hopes to improve last year's record of 35-33 with a very positive aspiration that they can win the District 21 Championship this year. While Coach Shambaugh says it is too early to see how much talent the team has, he expects a lot of leadership and support from his two Seniors, James "Stick" Pruett and Jeff Lyons. He states that his returning Juniors and Sophomores are strong and he is pleased with the recruiting decisions that were made with the incoming Freshmen. "We were looking for a stable group," states Coach Shambaugh; and so far he has "nothing bad to say."

The women's volleyball team is looking strong as they go into the 1991-92 season. Seniors Angie Heitz, Jody Yonts, Mary Watkins, and Donna Wetzel lead as returning players along with Junior Gina Kuntz and Sophomore4s Stephanie Taylor, Ginger Klink, and Theresa Meyers. Three talented Freshmen, Teri Quackenbush, Becky MacRae, and Becky Daugherty will join these returning players this year hoping to help improve last year's 11-14 record. Coach Molly (Totten) Jones states that the team's overall goal is to win Conference. Their biggest obstacle will be Huntington, their chief rival.

"I think this group can do it," says Coach Jones with confidence that her four Seniors who have played together consistently for the past two years will use their experience to help pull the team through.

An inside look at ELS

by Amy Howell

There are only 21 ELS English programs in the United States. Out of those 21 programs, there is only one in Indiana and it happens to be here at Marian College. As a matter of fact, this year it is celebrating its 14th year. But what is an ELS program?

ELS stands for English Language Service. It is a program that runs for 13 four-week sessions all year round. The sessions cover reading, writing, and conversation in English which add up to six classes a day, five days a week. It is also a program that enhances the English for an estimated 650 to 700 students a year.

The students who make up this number are from all over the world. For instance, people from Columbia, Panama, Jordan and Venice are just a few cultures that are represented.

Adele Tyson, who had been the Director for ELS since 1977, says that we should utilize this opportunity to learn about different cultures. She sees ELS "as being here representing foreign opportunity to meet the world in our own backyard. It's free and it's here all year round."

The most important goal to Adele is to bring the foreign students together with all the students here at Marian. If this goal is met, it would be bringing together a community on campus that would enable friendships to grow.

Unfortunately, this has been a very difficult goal to achieve. Those who are not in the ELS program sometimes view an ELS student as being different and/or strange. So, to help to overcome these feelings, Adele has come up with some great ideas for our different communities to become one.

First she has suggested to foreign language teachers to take an hour of their class and have the students go to the ELS Center or the ELS students go to the classroom. This would allow the foreign students to hear how Americans really talk and for American students to hear the foreign language firsthand.

Secondly, she has set up coffee hours. Coffee hours are set aside once a month for everyone on campus to get together and get acquainted. Hopefully, the next coffee hour will be Friday September 27th, but the date and time has yet to be confirmed. So keep looking for signs closer to the date.

Another project that's in the works is a project sponsored by the Sophomore Class. The class is trying to set up a one-hour, once a week conversation between the ELS students and Marian students.

This is very important for the ELS students because they want to learn all of the latest slang that Americans speak. It makes them feel more American and they can take it back home to tell their friends. But going home is a long way away.

Most of the students like Yeo-mi Lee, 21, and Yoko Ishida, 20, are college-bound. Yeo-mi Lee is from Korea and is here studying English so she will be able to become a psychology major at Hanover College. Yoko Ishida, who is from Japan wants to become a journalist. She says that studying here is very different than studying in Japan. Here we are more aggressive and are able to converse more with the teacher. We have a lot more freedom.

So we should take advantage of our freedom. Let's begin to interact with ELS students and learn what their culture is like and how they live, as well as learning a second language.
