Spooky stories haunt Marian College mansions

Is Allison Mansion haunted by the memory of its owner?

by John J. Mathis
associate editor

Halloween is the time of year when all ghost stories get brushed off and retold and shared with all of our friends and acquaintances. This being the case, The Carbon would like to share a couple of stories that have been told around campus.

The first place is the Stokley/Wheeler mansion. Frank Wheeler committed suicide here in 1921. The reasoning for this has been attributed to two things. One, he was about to lose his fortune for the second time. Two, he was a diabetic and gangrene had set into both of his legs.

Supposedly, Mr. Wheeler's ghost still lurks about in the mansion.

Sara Reid, assistant professor of music, says that she has seen the ghost. She was rehearsing one night when a man appeared in the rehearsal room directly across from her own. He was only there for a split second, but she was not the only one to see him. One of the singers that was there that night, saw the ghost, and has refused to return.

This next story was investigated by Marian College Police Officer, Everett She-roan. It is considered factual. One evening, a campus security officer came into the music building, turned on the necessary lights, and after making his rounds, started to leave. That is when he heard the jingling of keys. Upon inspection, he found that no one was in the building. Once again, he was about to leave when a door slammed. This door is the one that guards the top of the third floor staircase. This area is where Wheeler had a billiard table and a gun collection. The officer went up these stairs and found the door locked. That is when he called for assistance.

Determined to find the student that was causing all the shenanigans, both police officers searched the building. They found no one. They shook off their uneasy feelings and started to leave when the door slammed again. This time the Indianapolis Police Department was called in to help. Still expecting to find a student, a K-9 unit was sent.

The dog searched the house thoroughly. Suddenly, the tapping of dog toenails ceased echoing throughout the house. The dog had come to the foot of the third floor stairs...and had stopped. Despite the commands of the trainer, the dog only whined and cowered on the floor. The trainer was alleged to have said, "Whatever is up there, it's not man or beast and I don't need to see it."

Fall Preview Day hailed success

by Carl Gulde
guest writer

"If there was one word to describe the activities, presentations and efforts of all of those involved in the admission's first Preview Day, the word would be tremendous," said Bret Shambaugh, assistant director for admissions.

On Saturday, October 27, the admissions office held its first Campus Preview Day. The day was planned to help familiarize the prospective students with the campus and what college life would be like if they choose to come to Marian.

The day began with a breakfast and a welcome. The prospective students, 65 in all, were then greeted by Sr. Norma Rocklage. Sr. Norma presented a history of the school.

After the history presentation, the student prospects and their families moved on to the chapel where financial aid was discussed by director, John Shelton. "There were so many questions, that after an hour, we had to stop, so that we could move on to the next event on the schedule," said Shambaugh, "They were very involved."

The parents and students then moved on to a parent/student panel. This was set up so that the visitors could ask questions from the current students and their parents.

During some of the parent activities, games and activities to helped the students get to know each other. Members of the orientation staff performed skits showing what campus life would be like.

Following lunch at Stokely Mansion, the students moved on to the library. Once there, they talked and asked questions to the departments of interest to them.

After that, the prospects were greeted by the President of Marian College, Dr. Felicetti, who presented a video of life at Marian. That concluded the day.

Another Campus Preview Day is in the works for later this year. The admissions office does plan to have another preview day at the same time next year, due to its success this year.

On the day's success, Shambaugh said, "The admission's office would like to thank the entire Marian College community for helping us put on a tremendous Campus Preview Day."

Many high school seniors gather around library table to fill out application forms.

Issues at hand

by Dallice Hesselgrave
editor

Only 147 black students are enrolled at Marian. Only one full-time faculty member is black. No programs or activities are geared for minorities on campus. No classes are taught that deal with race relations or definitions of race. No blacks are involved with Student Board. Marian has only one black residence assistant. Only a handful of black students participate in sports.

What is wrong with this picture?

Over the next few weeks the Carbon will be investigating the same racial problems that most Marian students are ignorant of. These problems, whether a result of ignorance or intent, stab at the concept of Marian's "community-ness." How can "the college that cares" neglect part of its family? Although, by no means will the Carbon try to answer the deep-rooted problems of racial relations, it will attempt to probe the causes for Marian's neglect of black students.

Letters to the Editor

Responses to last week's letters

In response to Kent Cook's, anonymous' and other students at Marian College:

This letter is addressed to those students who were so concerned about the "Attention Black Students" signs. Some of the black students are sorry that you were so offended by the words "Attention Black Students."

For future reference we would appreciate if you would quote with exactness. In no shape, form, or fashion did we incorporate the word "all" in our signs. By your stating that the word "all" was used, you make the assumption that we have "all" black students backing us, trying to create an anti-social group. Those signs were not meant to offend anyone, they were merely to get the attention of the black students to be aware of a meeting that will be held for them. This gives the black students the opportunity to come together to discuss issues and ideas at Marian. This is a Black issue at Marian because there are no activities developed by or for the black students.

Yes, (we are all members of the Marian student body), but of a divided student body. Our only solution is by first, bringing unity amongst the black students.

Thanks for showing your concern by defacing, mutilating, and totally destroying our signs.

-- Yvette Wade
-- Larissa McCormick

I am writing this in reply to the letters concerning the Black student union. First of all, anyone can attend our meeting if they choose to do so. The notices posted simply implied that black students need to come together, so we can address black issues. My question to the non-black people, who are interested in black affairs as well, is: where were you when we were planning for Black History month? Can we expect to see you there in February of '91?

Mr. or Ms. Anonymous, you are a very uninformed person. Any non-white person can apply for black scholarships, or be in black beauty pageants. As a matter of fact, there were three white contestants in the Indiana Black Expo Talent Contest, and I know (personally) a white guy, who applied for the Scholarship. I disagree with people like you. I suggest that you do a little more research before you open your mouth.

As stated before, we are trying to discuss black issues here at Marian. That is all! We are not trying to segregate ourselves from anyone. If you still have a problem with that, maybe it is not us with a problem; it is you!

not. The issue of second-hand smoke has become a concern in our society. Marian is becoming increasingly more health conscious, and the new smoking policy is a positive step in that direction.

Students and faculty must support the new non-smoking policy

by Jenny Miller
staff writer

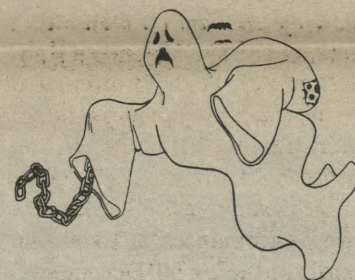

On Monday, October 22 the new Marian College smoking policy went into effect. The policy states that is to be no smoking in college buildings except in faculty, staff offices or individual residence hall rooms. The smoking in these areas must be agreed upon by those present. Also included is a warning concerning excessive violations: "If an excessive number of violations occur, serious consideration will be given to implementing a 'no-smoking' policy in all areas of the campus." The policy is to be enforced by all staff, faculty, and students. Signs will be posted in all unauthorized areas of the campus and cigarette receptacles will be removed.

On Monday, October 22 there were several students smoking in the cafe at dinner. It is hard to believe that no one knew about the new policy, or that no one was bothered by the smoke. Still nothing was done. Throughout the week, there were many students who continued to smoke in the cafe; nothing was done. Even though the general consensus is that the new policy is a good one, people seem hesitant to act on it. Perhaps many did not know about the policy. There were not any new signs up and ashtrays were still available. Until we, the students, faculty, and staff, speak up and the administrators get signs up and remove ashtrays, the smoking policy will be meaningless.

Do not get the idea that the new policy is favored by everyone. One student when asked to comment on the policy said in a derogatory tone, "It's so...so Catholic." And well it may be; that is catholic in the sense that we as human beings are striving to be "whole." Smoking is not an inherent part of being a human being. We are not born with a need for nicotine. But just as that is true, neither are we born for the need for, say, caffeine. Yet the college has no new policy banning morning coffee or that longed for first Coke of the day.

The difference is that smoking affects the health of others while caffeine does

Families enjoy day on campus

by Jordi K. Till
staff writer

If you and your family were one of the returning attendants from last year's Family Day you noticed quite an improvement. October 27, 1990 marked the start of an improved annual event when the parents and siblings of students spent the day on campus attending lectures, eating well-prepared meals, and just having fun.

Highlights of the day included a basketball scrimmage, a luncheon at Stokley Mansion, various panels to discuss and answer questions, a brief lecture on the future plans of Marian College, and a Marian College Family Liturgy. The family festival dinner and trolley car rides to downtown Indianapolis ended the day.

Sophomore Laura Miller said, "It was a lot better than last year. There were more activities and it involved many more people. It also addressed a lot more issues about college life that interested parents."

This year Family Day was coupled with Campus Preview Day, a time when prospective students and their families can come and tour campus. The reactions to this pairing also seemed quite favorable. One reaction Sr. Norma Rocklage received was the "wonderful spirit shown by the students; friendly, alive, and energetic."

The success of this year's Family Day brings an added aspect to Marian College.

Cherie Pierce and her family take a leisurely stroll across campus on Family Day.

Fehlinger has been involved in numerous activities: Tennis three years, Chorale, Intermural Volleyball, Campus Ministry, the Haunted House and Blood Drive. Interests include singing and playing euchre.

Holly loves watching the Cincinnati Bengals. Fehlinger states, "especially Boomer Eason: I like the commercial when he melts." She likes the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, especially Michelangelo because "he's a party dude." Her interests also include country music and the game show jeopardy.

Her most memorable moment in life was "meeting Tom Cruise and Dustin Hoffman during filming of Rainman."

Holly states why she came to Marian, "I didn't want to be just a number and my aunt and uncle went here." Fehlinger also states, "Sister Stella Gampfer has had the most influence on me."

During the second semester, Fehlinger will be student teaching at Chartard High School, and is hopeful to find a teaching position.

Famous last words to all: "Don't be afraid to be weird. I am."

Clare Hall Basement becomes haunted for two evenings

N. M. Gasco
Staff Writer

The basement in Clare Hall.

This is a phrase that strikes terror in the hearts of many students who must venture into its depths to do their laundry. But, what lurks in the darkness? On October 26, I found out. I visited the Clare Hall Haunted House, which was put on by the senior class.

There were four people in our group. Yet, ironically, I (the one with the weakest heart) ended up last in line so when we were immediately attacked with a real chain saw, I was the one in danger of being decapitated.

Around every corner was a new surprise and the temperature seemed to drop every few feet until there was an eerie chill in the air.

There were some memorable scenes that undoubtedly will give me nightmares for years, such as the one in which Cujo stopped tearing up his screaming victim long enough to attack us, a doctor in the midst of a rather unpleasant looking operation and a graveyard with a mummy shuffling through the leaves towards us, his arms outstretched. Of course, Jason was there to greet us as well. In fact, him and his butcher knife followed us for quite some time.

However, the worst part, aside from the hands grabbing at our feet, occurred when we finally approached the end we prayed for. Several monsters, grabbed us simultaneously.

A lot of work and effort went into the haunted house. A history teacher participated as the mummy and his wife joined in as well. It was rumored that even a nun got in on the fun.

The only disappointment was that more students didn't show up; I was the lucky number 13 that night. The ones that did barely made it out alive.

So, the next time you have to do your laundry in the basement of Clare Hall, bring a friend...
