The maggot saga continues

by Dallice Hesselgrave

"I am extremely disgusted with this school. While all of this mess was going on for over a month and a half I could have gotten a better night's sleep on a park bench over a heated vent downtown for free than I did in our dorm room that they are making us pay for." Yvonne Spartz feels strongly that the college has done a poor job of taking care of the larvae problem in her and Corrine Wickens' room.

Hopefully, this is the end of the problem. After spraying the tiles in their ceiling several times, maintenance realized that it was not working and last week they ripped down the tiles only to discover shovelfuls of pigeon feces, on which the larvae were apparently feeding. There were holes around the venting system which is where the pigeon droppings were falling in from. Those holes have now been sealed and the droppings have been removed, so hopefully this will not happen again. This problem should be contained only to this one room because of metal dividers between the ceilings of the rooms.

So, for the time being, a girl on three west has moved into a friend's room and Spartz and Wickens will be staying in her room for the rest of this semester. Then they will be moving to another room.

Wickens said she was upset about their room, but, "I realize the college is facing a lot of maintenance problems right now, our room was a relatively small problem, but there are so many little problems that are starting to add up and that is what scares me."

Pell Grants shrink for 1989-90

(CPS) -- Students may find their Pell Grants will shrink after next June, the U.S. Department of Education warned last week.

The government, department spokeswoman Victoria Tripp said, is running short of the funds it uses to make Pell Grants.

Tripp said that campuses -- which are supposed to return unused Pell Grant money to the department, which then would give it to other students at other schools -- have not refunded as much money as the department had expected.

As a result, the government could try to balance its books by cutting the amounts it grants all but the very poorest students, borrowing money, or by asking Congress for a "supplemental appropriation."

Tripp said she didn't know how big the "shortfall" in Pell Grant funds would be--she guessed it would be $30 million to $50 million--but Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education (ACE) in Washington, D.C., predicted it would amount to $250 million.

Saunders feared the department would choose to compensate for the missing money by cutting everyone's grants a little, which the Reagan administration has threatened to do to both Pell Grants and Guaranteed Student Loans when shortfalls arose in 1987 and 1986.

Saunders wants the department to ask Congress for a supplemental appropriation instead of cutting grants.

He termed the department's choice "the first test of the Bush administration's support for education."

"It's not fair to automatically reduce students' awards. The department's estimates are always wrong, then if the estimate (of needed funds) is over the appropriation, they want to reduce the grants by that much."

Tripp said the department would make its decision about how to handle the shortfall in January.

Art museum sponsors seminar

by Corrine Wickens

Every two years the Indianapolis Art Museum sponsors a seminar in conjunction with the Coercion for Art Education through Butler, IUPUI, University of Indianapolis, and Marian College. Between the four schools, approximately 100 people are attending the seminar, however, most of them are auditing the class so that only 35-40 students from all four colleges actually take the class.

From Marian nine students are presently taking the 3 credit hour seminar which meets once a week for three hours on Tuesday from 5:30-8:30 at the Art Museum.

There are three main lectures--literature, given by Dr. Euyong; history, by Dr. Eno; and art, by Mr. Richardson, the curator of the art museum. The two coordinators from Marian are Sr. Sue Bradshaw and Dr. James Divita.

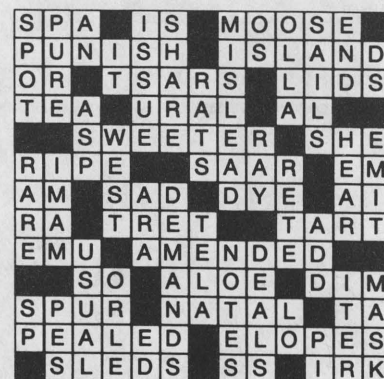

"I enjoy having so many different speakers," Francis Kepes said. "For example, they are flying in a Chinese musician from New York for a special concert because the theme for tonight (Nov. 29) is Chinese music." Kepes only regret about taking the class is that they only meet once a week. "Three hours or more in one sitting is just too much," she said.

Stacey Nicholas, a junior, said that she really liked having the class at the Art Museum instead of at the college. "It's great because you have a lecture, and then you can actually see the pieces at the museum." However, she did not like the limited number of grades. "You're given so much information that it feels like it will be next to impossible to study for the final."

Council changes policies

by Stacey Nicholas

College Council recently changed "withdraw passing/withdraw failing" (WP/WF) to a straight withdraw (W) and changed the last date to withdraw from a class to the Friday of the ninth week of classes. After that date, a student withdrawing from a class will receive an "F" grade. This does not include students who withdraw from school.

In an effort to accomplish as much work as possible to be included in the new college catalogue now being prepared, a number of other actions were taken regarding academic matters during the November, double session of council. Offerings and requirements were modified in the following programs: Art, Psychology, Music, Theatre/Speech, Radiologic Technology, Nursing, Computer Studies, English, Business Administration, Accounting, and Fashion Merchandising.

The numerical values assigned to the letter grades in the college catalogue were abolished because they are "obsolete, cause confusion, and restrict pedagogical freedom and creativity." The general education requirement of logic, mathematics, or computer science can now be met by CS 110.

Non-English speaking students must now score 550 or better on the TOEFL regardless of completion of level 109 at an ELS Center.

Specifics regarding departmental and other changes may be gleaned from the minutes of college council or the respective departments.

Knightly notes

The last day to withdraw from a course with a WP or WF grade is December 2, 1988. Students wishing to withdraw should leave themselves enough time to get all appropriate signatures. There is no guarantee that an advisor or instructor will be on campus on the deadline date.

Marian College Theatre will present Charles Dickens' classical tale A Christmas Carol. The only public performance will be Sunday, Dec. 4 at 7 p.m. in Marian Hall Auditorium. This production is offered at a special half price ticket of $2 per person. The story of Scrooge's transformation has delighted children and adults for countless Christmases. Call 929-0292 for reservations.

STUDENTS: When you leave for Christmas vacation no newspapers will be saved. Other mail I will keep. If you have some special first class mail you must have and if you leave your address at the mailroom, I will try to forward it to you. Thank you. Sister Rosemary Lee.

Accounting Society Pizza Party: Dec. 6 at Showbiz Pizza. Meet in front of Marian Hall Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. All Accounting Majors/Minors -- Seniors, Juniors, Sophomores, Freshmen -- are invited. Rides provided.

Students expecting to graduate in May of 1989 will have the opportunity to order caps and gowns and have measurements taken on December 1 from 11-4 p.m. The December ordering time is designed especially for students completing degree requirements at the end of this semester. All others, however, are welcome to place an order at this time. Mr. Chuck Williams will return in March to take other orders.

Telephone Tip: When placing a call from one campus extension to another campus extension, it is not necessary to dial 9-929-xxxx. Please use only the three-digit extension number assigned to the number you are wanting to call. Dialing 9-929-xxxx not only ties up outgoing lines for others that may be waiting for an outside line, but could result also in delays in receiving incoming calls.

Students will have an opportunity to evaluate teachers in all their classes during the last two weeks of classes beginning November 28. Teachers will give directions and distribute forms toward the end of a selected class period and then leave while students complete their responses to the questions. The instrument used is the new form designed by Dr. Faye Plascak and psychology students in an Industrial Psychology course last fall. (Two items have been revised for clarification purposes.) The last student completing responses will be asked to bring pencils and the entire set of answer sheets to the academic dean's office immediately after the class. All reusable evaluation forms are to be returned to the instructor's office, unless otherwise directed.
