Life is full of "almost did"-s.

The week you've waited for is here! This year the Care-a-thon; slated for April 23, 24, and 25; is being sponsored by the Carbon with advisement of the Philosophy department. For those of you who are still unaware of the purpose of the Care-a-thon, let me explain.

The Careathon is a fund raising event for the Kenny Rogers Memorial Scholarship. Kenny Rogers was insturmental in starting the Upbeat Program, now defunct, it once served to encourage inner-city dropouts to understand the importance of an education and complete their own, thus broadening their number of possibilities. Kenny met an untimely end between his Junior and Senior years, when a karate injury was incorrectly diagnosed as bruised ribs and died through the night of a ruptured spleen sustained in the accident. The scholarship fund begun in his honor, each year awards a scholarship to an outstanding underprivileged high school senior exhibiting academic excellence.

Pending confirmation, Video Kids will be performing Wednesday night, April 23, at 10:00 in Piene Arena; admission will be $1.00. The Video Kids are one of the city's hottest new bands, having over thirty original compositions to their credit. One night of the Care-a-thon will be geared to 60's music with a special treat, our own "Beatles" will be reunited again after a separation lasting overtwo weeks. Our city's own J&D Blues Band will complete the musical arrangement with a repetoire of jazz, blues, and folk.

Clare Hall Board is sponsoring both Euchre and Backgammon tournaments. The Dance Marathon has been reduced to 12 hours in order to enable more students to participate. The Marathon is slated for 7:00 Thursday. Sign-up sheets will be available in front of Marian Hall Auditorium along with sponsor sheets. Anyone interested in helping out with food preparation will find an appropriate sign-up sheet for that too.

The biggest and most tenetive news is another Monte Carlo night. Everything is hinging on finding people willing to donate their time dealing cards or running a game. On the job training will be given as necessary, and you know where the sign up sheets will be, in front of Marian Hall Auditorium. Student Board is sponsoring a pie throwing booth where you can pelt victims with whipped topping and not get in trouble for it.

Faculty members are invited to donate significant item(s) to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Many other items too sketchy to mention will also be auctioned.

Coffee House entertainment will include: Sid Savage, rock star; Fried Ham Players; that marvelous duo, Elmer Dorf and his Dummy, the Oldenburg Brothers and much much more.

Keep your eyes open for a more formal schedule available in your dorm, or Marian Hall. If you can, help. The purpose of the Care-a-thon is to raise money, so come, get involved, spend your money, and have a great time.

On behalf of those who have already been such a help,
Carbon and Philosophy Dept.,

College students have always had to suffer a number of indignities ranging from the impersonal stroking and fondness of the Administration, to hated early morning classes, to the boring scholarliness of certain textbooks and professors, to often insane demands put upon "Papers,"...well, the fact is that pretty nearly everything in college life reaches that despised level of being an indignity at one time or another during our careers here. But only one thing maintains the consistency of being a perpetual bane to the more knowledgeable and carefree of students. Contrary to popular belief, it is not those wandering minstrels of despair who wreak their argumentiveness on anyone who has the misfortune to be standing still at the moment. These are merely flies in the ointment. They can be avoided. Someone told me once how, but I've since forgotten; it didn't work for me the time I tried it, anyway. It got so bad that time that I dived into a calculus class—where I had no business being—just to escape. I suffocated in there for the full fifty minutes and came out in a state of shock. No, this isn't the Big Evil. The Big Evil is Grades. Grades. Sounds like what they do to level out a road before they pour asphalt on it and make it all nice and smooth. Except in a school grades are the potholes and bumps in the road. They are supposed to be signposts of each student's progress. That's about as likely as saying that all students go to college to learn.

I'm not saying that grades serve no purpose, but that they serve a purpose the direct opposite for that which they were intended. It cuts down on the number of dummies in a higher-level course in which the prof is known to be rather unkind and severe on the subject, for instance. It's hard to keep your 4.00000 average unblemished when a course requires more than barfing up half a dozen lectures into a bluebook and spreading it around evenly. Just ask my friend Marchmont. He still sees the greatest tragedy of his life as occurring on the day he didn't drop Advanced Marvel Comics Theory 256 and ended up shattering the mirror-like image of his perfection as reflected in his grade point average. He feared it would make him look slovenly and careless to future employers, this scar which defaced his entire academic record. In his own words, it was "like a pimple right on the end of your nose and it won't go away—and it's Prom time, for God's sake!" Marchmont had problems. His name even kept him from reaching the top of the Dean's List in the pre-deluge days when he had had a perfect record. This caused him no end of frustration ("Why can't my name be Adams?") and fits of melancholy ("Oh, all those Bakers and Donovans and Farquhars—there's a reason for them being above me!").

Now, undoubtedly, there are some studious students saying to themselves that this is one large pile. As long as they are honest with themselves, fine. For any of the rest of you that might be interested, however, please get in touch with me. Marchmont needs somebody he can relate to.

"I seem to be a blur"—Alex Swifden

Last Thursday evening I washed some sweaters to get ready to put away for the summer. I took them down to the laundry room to dry. Friday morning I returned to get the dry sweaters. One of them was missing. It was not the one on the end but in the middle of the row of my sweaters.

At first I panicked, then I thought it could have been a mistake. But missing from the middle of the row, it just looked like someone "took it".

It was a new white sweater I received for Christmas from someone very close. The sweater being gone upset me to the fullest. But then the sweater being gone was not so bad as that someone took it right off the clothes line, knowing full well it was not theirs. I think this is called stealing.

This is a Catholic College. Knowing this I would feel that I can trust the people. I have done my laundry many times without any problem, until now. I have heard other people say they have had their things taken. Not only clothes but books from the Bookroom in Clare Hall, equipment from the Board Room, weights from the weight room and who knows what else that is not reported. Things are at our access here at Marian to use not abuse. If things keep ending up missing they might not offer anything to sue without being treated like children.

I'm sure if the people would return the things they took the kind people like me and many others would accept them graciously with no penalty. But if they don't, I'm sure, if they are not punished now, they will suffer later. I hope that the people who have stolen or abused articles feel awful, they should. I would like to have my sweater back, please.

Concerned and missing
my sweater,
Beth Fox, room 216

who participated in the Ash Wednesday<sup>6</sup> fast, as well as contributed to the collection basket "for the poor". ARA Food Service reported that the amounts saved in food costs that day was $40 which was contributed, along with $60 from the collection basket during Lent, for a total of $100. A check for that amount was sent to the Medical Mission Sisters who serve in underdeveloped countries. Some of you will remember a member of that community, Sister Mary Kirkhoff, M.D., who lived here last year and went as a volunteer to work with the refugees from Cambodia. Thanks to all!

We will be looking into what happened to all this equipment in the next few weeks.

Alice motiones that the meeting be adjourned and Mark seconded. The meeting was adjourned at 9:58;

Despite rumors to the contrary, the art of apathy does not indeed run rampant through the halls of good ole' Marian, and for the ones who claim otherwise I would direct their apathetic glances toward the atmosphere of expectancy that is being generated around here at the moment. Of course these beings who are so apathetic will probably say that this mysterious air of expectancy is non-existent, that they can't feel the vibrations vibrating through the air, but one must make allowances for such as they because, in reality, they are but the product of their under-stimulated and apathetic imaginations and are therefore not to be held libel for their stammerings.

Of course I have no need of saying what this air of expectancy is because those of you who aren't trapped in the apathetic state of which has been described will already know of what I write about and those who do not should seek guidance as soon as possible because they are fast approaching the first stage of apathy which can only lead to the final apathetic stage that those around you are in.

NATHANIEL, NATHANIEL, WHEREFORE ART THOU?

At last I see the light. When you invited me to join you in sorrow, to help you grieve your beloved ones, to ease the strain of seeing another one close to you make that last fare-thee-well, I was honored that it was to me that you turned. I didn't mind, nor did I question when you said it was proper to bring gifts to the suffering one left behind so that his (in this case, yours) agony of being alone in a time of need could be eased. I will admit I was a little bit suspicious when you told me that your dear aunt who was buried just a month ago had revived but had succumbed at the shock of discovering herself to be numbered among the living once again and so had to be interred a second time and that it was necessary for me to bring you a case of your favorite brew to help rid yourself of this double tragedy. But now I see the light and know you for what you are.

You ramble on about the evils of cutting classes when the real evil is still within you for deceiving those of us who thought we were numbered among your friends. Shame on you, Nathaniel the evil, for yours is to be a harsh existence and if ever I see you hiding in the restroom again, I shall broadcast your whereabouts til the walls crumble.

A mourner who mourned once too often,
Icharoo Narkantski

Believe me--I didn't take those 5 and 10 pound weights from the weight room. Search me. I swear I didn't. I don't even know where the weight room is. I didn't even know the school had one. I didn't even care. Besides, why would I want a pair of weights? Why would anybody? I'm not even a Phys. Ed major. I'm an English major. When I want some physical education I hoist typewriters. It won't do any good to threaten me with twenty-five laps around the candy machine either. Give up. You can't squeeze a confession out of me. Honest, I didn't take them.

JEAN-PAUL SARTRE (1906-1980)

Man is the means by which things are manifested. It is our presence in the world which multiplies relations. It is we who set up a relationship between this tree and that bit of sky. Thanks to us, that star which has been dead for millennia, the quarter moon, and that dark river are disclosed in the unity of landscape. It is the speed of our auto and our airplane which organizes the great masses of the earth. With each of our acts, the world reveals to us a new face. But, if we know that we are directors of being, we also know that we are not its producers. If we turn away from this landscape, it will sink back; there is no one mad enough to think that it is going to be anihil-ated. It is we who shall be annihilated, and the earth will remain in its lethargy until another consciousness comes along to awaken it.
